Abstract

This paper will discuss the process of preparing a participatory coastal management plan and the initial implementation focusing on the social context and processes. In doing so, this paper will look at the dynamics of interaction between various stakeholders involve in the activities. To understand the social context, I will evaluate the past rehabilitation process and look at the position of local communities. To understand the social processes in the preparation of the management plan, I will explain the social interactions in all steps of the activities of preparing the management plan. Conflicts, cooperation and collaboration will be the main issues explained. At the end, this paper is expected to highlight some social issues of post-tsunami rehabilitation, coastal management and community empowerment.
