Abstract

This paper describes the management of forest resources in south Sulawesi in this relation to local-specific institution called Ammatowa. It can be seen, from this description, the possibilities of empowering local institutions faor maaging forest resource in the context of future scenario of regional autonomy. the question in this particular issue is “is Ammatowa constitutes an institution that has fully been used for managing forest resource in South Sulawesi”.

This paper underlines that the autonomy is a certainly, while ammatowa is apparently an institution that has not fully been used for managing forest in South Sulawesi, and thus need to be update and contextualized through a reflective mutual understandsding. It is stated in the end of this paper that the reality of changes in Ammatowa should also be seen as a certainty which is not only cause by the expansion of the forest resource management requiement it self, but also by manifestation of the Ammatowa as a systems of open community.
